

A close-up photograph of a clownfish (Amphiprioninae) swimming within the tentacles of a sea anemone. The clownfish has a bright orange body with two prominent white vertical stripes outlined in black. It is positioned in the center-left of the frame, facing slightly towards the right. The sea anemone's tentacles are numerous, thick, and have a pale yellowish-white color with pinkish tips. They fill the background and foreground, creating a textured, almost abstract pattern. The lighting is soft and diffused, highlighting the colors of the fish and the delicate structure of the anemone.

Igor Bondar

Photo thoughts 4

Risk always chases some goal. Fame, money, power are common human goals. Helping others, fighting for truth and sense of duty are the lofty goals of the Creator.

.

The desire to perpetuate oneself can be found pretty often.
However, the understanding how this can be implemented is much less common.

What do greedy one and crocodile have in common? It's simple
- both the crocodile's jaw and the greedy one's hand work perfectly for compression, but for unclench - much worse.

All sorts of evil, lies, passions always try to catch us in this life.
Our task is to detect them in time and bypass.

Many on this Earth like to be interested in what they absolutely do not need.

Our expectations of a relationship and the relationship itself are sometimes very different things. What can be said here – God sometimes also has an abyss between expectations from people and the reality.

If something is not clear to us in this world then it is always more useful to look at it initially positively.

Great benefits are often hidden in the interweaving of different cultures, styles and traditions. Exchanging the best, humanity inevitably becomes better.

(to be continued)

www.bookfaceyourself.com