

Igor Bondar

*Photo
thoughts 3*

The world today is changing at an incredible rate. Many familiar things from the recent past are already as old as the Egyptian pyramids for our children.

A person likes to control everything. But, God loves to remind him that this activity is not the most effective, and there are much more important things in our lives.

We all leave a mark in this life. If we live in a mediocre way, this trace will always be insignificant, but if we live correctly and morally, the trace will be noticeable and beautiful.

All soul owners have an explicit or hidden craving for the sublime.

A green idea is good as long as we don't start to drive it to the point of absurdity.

In pursuit of extraordinary photos and short fame, we are often ready to risk quite important things.

Humanity will be as viable as it will be able to maintain logic and common sense.

Indeed, everything is incredibly mixed up in the confused world today...

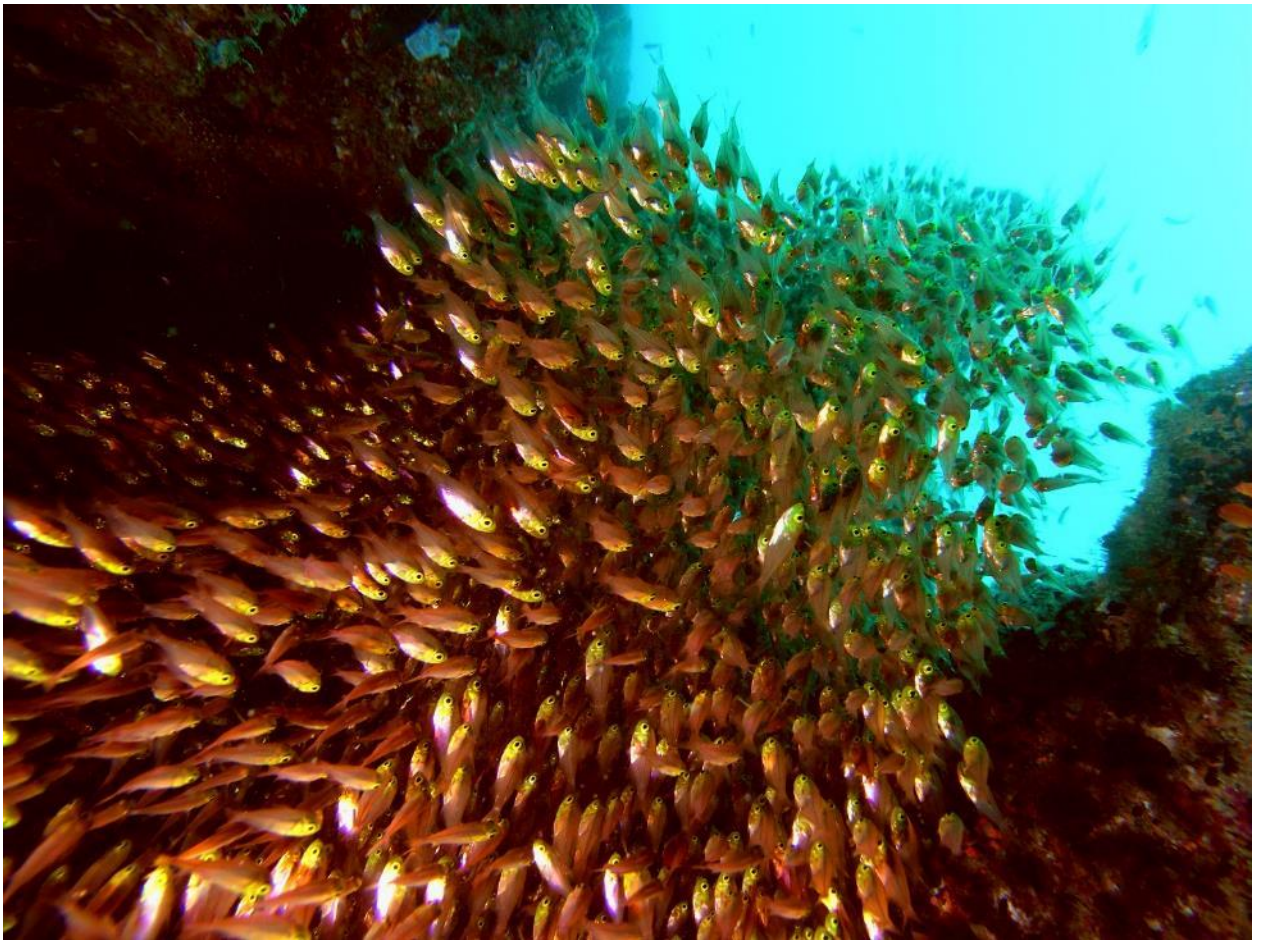

The more technogenic we ourselves become, the more technogenic our creativity becomes.

If people lose important and reliable landmarks in their lives, they often begin to take very dubious opinions seriously.

No matter how much humanity bangs its head on various newfangled concepts, it will still have a real way out in only one direction.

Boring people flip a coin in order to tell their fortune. Lovers tear away leaves on a chamomile. Super aesthetes read their fortune by whether left or right pelican will catch a fish.

Sometimes, it takes a lifetime to figure out what is really worth something in this world,

...and what is actually a cheap fake.

Board, sea, sun and breeze – all this is incredibly much for those who have understood something in life.

Living in a familiar reality, we cannot even imagine how much of everything visible and invisible exists around us.

Sad experience for a person is often more useful than success.
The healthy realism that results from this is much more valuable than naive self-confidence.

The ability to see everything in a special light is probably funny.
However, it is advisable after that not to face reality.

To be honest, an ordinary man can't really make a difference in this world. But he can always choose what to look at in this world.

Peaceful coexistence in abundance is not uncommon. However, peace and goodwill in difficult conditions, among people, are possible only if they have morality.

Other people's dreams are a very unclear thing. Sometimes you'll never guess what someone is dreaming about until you see it all yourself...

No matter how much you tell sinners that they will come to the wrong place, they still generally do not believe. Well, until they face the facts themselves.

The beauty of our world with its millions of wonderful places proves the beauty of their Creator.

People, by their very nature, often remain children. Only their toys get bigger and more expensive over the years. Those who outgrow earthly toys really grow up.

In recent years, many new spiritual paths in life have been invented. However, if those paths lie far from commandments of the Creator of life, then they will not end happily.

Society may seem pretty homogeneous to us, but it is not. In the souls of outwardly similar people, there can be very different contents - from light to darkness, from angels to demons.

Curiosity is the engine of many processes on earth. Sometimes good, sometimes not - it depends a lot on what morality the curious are based on.

Harmony in the family is achievable, but it is always the result of efforts on both sides. If efforts come from only one side, real harmony does not appear.

(to be continued)