

Igor Bondar

DOLPHINS

4

Stressy

Igor Bondar

DOLPHINS 4 Stressy

A fairy tale

“Zolotoye sechenie“ private publisher
2 0 2 4

New adventures in the lives of our underwater friends —
this time, with a romantic outcome for dolphin Geo.

Illustrated by Alyona Garbuz.

“Zolotoye sechenie“ private publisher.

ISBN 978-5-907756-40-3

Copyright © Igor Bondar, 2016–2024
Copyright © Design: „Zolotoye
sechenie“, 2016–2024

The Missing

A working day at the office of The Globe Agency was about to end when suddenly, a new visitor appeared in the doorway. Three dolphins: Bin, Karen and Geo, as well as turtle Medky, turned their heads toward the guest with interest. The visitor turned out to be a young and a very attractive dolphinet. She swam inside and looked around with curiosity. Everyone was waiting patiently.

‘Can we help you?’ Medky asked politely after a while.

‘What?’ the dolphinet startled and suddenly turning to the turtle, she slapped Geo’s nose with her tail. ‘Oh, yes, yes! I need your help. Legends are told already about your agency in the ocean. I’m sorry, I was just looking around a little...’

‘Well, this is a big exaggeration,’ said Bin.

The dolphinet turned quickly towards him, this time touching Karen’s nose with her tail.

‘Oh, you don’t say! I don’t think so,’ she smiled, looking at Bin. ‘All the sharks keep talking about your victory over the poachers of the Galápagos Islands. By the way, my name is Stressy. I already know your names. The turtle’s name is Medky and the dolphins are: Bin, Karen and...’

‘Geo,’ a voice said from behind her.

Stressy turned around instantly once again. This time, it was Bin’s nose that suffered. After that, everyone took precautions and swam a little away from her.

‘Right, you should be Geo, then!’ the dolphinet said, looking at him with a smile. ‘You all look like I imagined.’

‘What brought you here, Stressy?’ Medky asked her again, willing to get to the point.

‘A big trouble has happened,’ the young dolphinet replied, turning towards him swiftly again.

This time, none of the friends suffered from her tail.

‘My father is missing and I don’t know where to look for him,’ said the visitor and her eyes became very sad.

‘All right, Stressy, let’s do it this way,’ Bin suggested, ‘you come back here in two hours. We’ll call the rest of our friends and then we’ll all listen to your story very attentively.’

‘Will you help me?’ the dolphinet asked him with hope.

‘We’ll do our best,’ Geo answered instead of Bin.

‘Thank you very much!’ Stressy brightened up. ‘Then, I’ll be back here exactly in two hours.’

She happily turned around to the exit, knocking down a globe with her tail, and swam out. The friends thoughtfully followed her with their eyes.

‘How did she manage to come in here at all?’ Bin started thinking aloud. ‘Stressy... if we ever find her father, the first thing we must ask is whether he gave her that name on purpose or not. What do you think, Geo?’

His friend did not answer. Bin turned to him and froze amazed: Geo with a weird shine in his eyes was still looking in the direction where Stressy had swum to. Bin had never seen such look on his friend.

‘Geo, my friend,’ he could only pronounce. ‘Don’t tell me you liked that office devastator!’

‘She’s so vulnerable!’ Geo said in an unusual voice.

‘Oh, Neptune!’ the other three friends exclaimed at once.

* * *

Two hours later, all the members of The Globe Agency settled on the upper deck of the ship. Having taken account of their new guest’s clumsiness, they sat in a very wide circle. The pretty Stressy swam in exactly on time and greeted Ponty and Bolly whom she just saw for the first time. Then, the young dolphinet began her story.

‘My case is not a big one and it’s very personal. I understand that,’ Stressy smiled sadly. ‘But it’s very important for me. My father, whom I love dearly, disappeared several months ago. He swam alone to see our relatives that live on the other coast of Australia; no one has seen him since then.’

‘Why are you so sure about that, Stressy?’ Bin asked her.

‘I’ve recently come back from the places where my dad was going,’ the dolphinet replied. ‘He didn’t return in the reasonable time we expected him to; I became very worried and decided to swim there myself. But, none of our relatives who live on that coast saw him.'

A long silence fell on the deck.

'Well, I don't even know what to say, Stressy,' Bin finally broke the silence with a gloomy voice. 'Unfortunately, anything bad can happen to a dolphin in the ocean: poachers, big sharks, ship's screws. If an adult dolphin doesn't return home for a long time, it'll almost always mean that something bad happened to him, I'm afraid.'

'Yes, I know that,' Stressy nodded sadly, but then she lifted her head again. 'But what would you do if your father was missing?'

Everyone began to think.

'Probably the same thing as you are doing now,' Geo replied for everyone.

The others nodded in agreement.

'I've heard a lot of good stories about you,' the young dolphinet smiled guiltily, 'so I've decided to use my last chance.'

'You've done the right thing,' Karen admitted. 'It's quite possible it won't be in vain.'

'Have you got any thoughts in this regard, my dear?' Bin asked her with interest.

'It's more of an inkling, Binnie,' she replied. 'But first, we need to discuss it together thoroughly.'

Having said that, Karen looked at Stressy.

‘Your father wasn’t old, was he?’

‘No, he wasn’t, of course!’ Stressy finally smiled. ‘He was still young and absolutely healthy. Also, he loved travelling very much.’

Karen nodded, satisfied.

‘That’s fine, Stressy! Then, we have something to discuss right now. Would you mind swimming back to us in about an hour?’

The visitor nodded her head, slightly surprised.

‘Sure, sure. If that helps you to figure something out.’

Right after that, Stressy turned around quickly and swam away from the ship. This time, only Geo received a slap on his nose – only he was not afraid of standing near her...

‘So, my darling, tell us,’ manta Bolly was making a beautiful wave with her wings, which started from one end of her wing and finished at the other, ‘what came to your smart pretty head?’

All the other friends looked at Karen with interest.

‘I’ll tell you right away that we don’t have much chance here’ the dolphinet smiled and began speaking her thoughts. ‘As you know, my profession on land was related to the study of dolphins and I know quite a lot about it.’

‘But, how is it connected to Stressy’s father?’ a curious Ponty asked her.

‘Patience,’ Karen smiled again. ‘So, we fed wild dolphins from the shore of our island...’

‘And sometimes, you managed to do that quite well,’ Bin added.

Everyone laughed.

‘But islands like these, Binnie, are not the only places where dolphins meet the people,’ Karen said. ‘People also have dolphinariums and aquariums for that.’

‘What are those?’ everyone wondered.

‘They are a sort of enclosed water pools where the dolphins caught by people live in.’

‘Caught?’ the friends asked in one voice.

‘Well, yes. People, especially children, love communicating with dolphins’, Karen explained, ‘so in order to always have such opportunity, they build dolphinariums.’

‘I didn’t know anything about it,’ Bin reacted, surprised. ‘What do they do with the dolphins there?’

‘Well, they feed them, teach them to perform some tricks in front of the public, jump high, do some stunts synchronously and many other things. By the way, apart from the dolphins, there are other sea animals too.’

‘It seems that I’m starting to understand something here,’ Geo said thoughtfully. ‘Do you think that Stressy’s father could have been caught and put in one of those dolphinariums?’

‘A small chance of that,’ Karen nodded, ‘but still, it is there. I guess it’s not quite the time for Stressy to know about my past life among the people yet, as well as our other capabilities.’

‘Now, this is all clear to me’, said Medky, and then asked, ‘can the dolphins be freed from those dolphinariums?’

This time, it was Karen’s turn to spread her fins wide apart.

‘Who knows? But, I’m sure we can always come up with something,’ she replied. ‘Yet, it’s too early to talk about it. First, we should check the dolphinariums. There aren’t too many of them in Australia. And then, if we are lucky, we’ll think further. These dolphinariums might be located right on the shore of the ocean, so we’ll be able to solve the problem with the help of good old pliers.’

‘I agree,’ Bin nodded. ‘Let’s start with simply checking the dolphinariums.’

‘Dear, do they sell pizza near the dolphinariums?’ Bolly’s sweet voice sounded.

‘Of course they do. There are many children there,’ Karen replied to the friends’ laughter.

Geo was pleased with this turn of events, smiling the widest of all.

‘It means you’re swimming with me, my friends? That’s great! I thought that I’d have to help her on my own.’

‘If you need pliers there, what will you do without me then?’ Ponty asked.

‘Also, these pliers need to be brought to the place,’ Medky added and smiled cheerily. ‘Besides, saving someone only with the help of Stressy will only be suicidal.’

‘And somebody needs a pretty good rest from all these endless jokes’, Bolly smiled, ‘preferably at a place where pizza is served. In fact, Bin’s parents really enjoyed working instead of me. They’ve got quite a talent for that.’

Everyone burst into laughter.

‘Great!’ Geo reacted. ‘May I tell Stressy all the information she needs to know?’

A new wave of laughter burst.

‘Well, well, my friend,’ Bolly said, finally getting her breath back, ‘apparently, a harpoon of love has struck your poor heart.’

Actually, the joke – from which the manta borrowed this phrase – was about a Cupid's arrow that struck the heart of a boy named Johnny. But, a quick-witted Bolly converted it into sea language.

‘Also, take care of your nose,’ Bin added with a smile.

An hour later, Geo had finished telling the news to Stressy who had returned to them. The dolphinet was so overwhelmed with the hope she had been given that she even kissed Geo in the cheek as he finished his speech. The dolphins don’t blush, but their tails always give them away! So, Geo’s tail gave him away completely, showing that he was on depth nine at that moment.

‘So, Stressy,’ Bin finally addressed the young dolphinet smiling, ‘in a couple of days, my friends and I will set off and in a couple of months, we’ll bring back some news for you.’

Stressy looked at him in surprise.

‘What about me? Won’t you take me with you?’

‘This might not be an easy journey,’ Medky spoke. ‘You’d better stay at home and wait for us. It will be safer.’

‘Safer?’ Stressy wondered. ‘But, my father may be somewhere there! I want to go with you too, to help him. I think I’ll be of some help to you and I promise to obey.’

Everyone looked at her with a shade of doubt.

‘All right, let’s do it this way,’ Bin said after thinking for a while. ‘I suggest that all members of the agency vote for or against your participation in this search. If for prevails, you’ll join us. If not, take no offence. Agreed?’

The dolphinet nodded contentedly.

‘Great idea!’ Medky reacted. ‘So, let’s start voting. Who’s for?’

Geo was the first to raise his fin up. Stressy smiled at him so tenderly that he raised his fin even higher.

Bolly and Ponty exchanged glances and raised their wing and tentacle as well. Most of all, they valued having cheerful companions and good jokes on their trip.

‘The votes are even - three to three,’ Bin commented.

Medky thought for a moment and spun his globe. When it stopped, Australia was right in front of him. He sighed and raised his fin.

First, Bin and Karen looked at each other, and then at the happy Geo. After that, they also sighed and raised their fins.

‘Unanimously!’ Stressy brightened up. ‘I knew it would be like this.’

The friends burst into laughter.

‘Then, there’s just one tiny question left,’ Bin said. ‘Stressy, will you please leave us alone for several minutes?’

‘Sure,’ the dolphinet responded quickly and swam aside.

‘Is it about me?’ Karen asked Bin.

‘Yes,’ he nodded. ‘Somebody will have to tell her everything about you and me, and about Aya. She’ll know it anyway, but it’d be much better if we tell her about it in advance.’

‘You are right,’ Bolly nodded and looked at Geo cunningly. ‘So, which one of us can explain everything to her delicately?’

‘Perhaps, one of the dolphins should try it?’ Ponty caught up. ‘They are closer to her and they are so eloquent.’

Bin and Karen smiled with their eyes.

‘Well then, may I have a try?’ Geo happily suggested. ‘I’m always ready to help when needed.’

The others nodded their heads smiling. After that, Geo turned around quickly and, having brushed Bin’s nose with the tip of his tail, he swam to Stressy.

‘Good gracious!’ Bin uttered to himself. ‘It turns out this clumsiness may pass on to others.’

* * *

Soon, Geo caught up with Stressy and they swam along the reef together.

‘Stressy, can you keep a secret?’ dolphin asked her.

‘Secret? Of course, I can keep a secret,’ the young dolphinet replied without thinking, but then corrected herself, ‘though, I’ve never had one to keep yet.’

‘Mmm,’ then, it was Geo’s turn to think it over. ‘Well now, you’ll have plenty.’

‘Great!’ Stressy said and wondered, ‘what secrets will I have to keep now?’

‘Well, firstly’, Geo began, ‘Karen was a human being and she can still turn into one at times.’

‘Wow!’ Stressy replied, smiling. ‘Anything else?’

‘What? Aren’t you very surprised?’ Geo asked, amazed.

‘No,’ she replied and, looking at the dolphin, she explained, ‘you know, my father loved telling me different stories he composed when I was little. I’m so used to them that now I can’t tell what is real in life and what is not. That is why I tend to believe in many things.’

Geo looked at his female companion with warmth.

‘So, what else is there?’ Stressy asked him curiously.

‘Else?’ Geo started thinking. ‘We also have Aya.’

‘Who’s that?’

‘It’s our extraordinary friend who will always help us in the hour of need.’

‘Ah!’ the young dolphinet nodded in recognition. ‘What else?’

‘Mmm,’ Geo tried to remember. ‘Well, Bin became a human being once in order to be with Karen.’

‘It’s so romantic!’ Stressy rolled her eyes and then she suddenly added, ‘well, if everyone here is becoming human, maybe I should try it too?’

Geo looked at her and frowned.

‘I don’t think it’s a good idea, Stressy, you’ll probably get lost on land. I’m afraid we won’t be able to find you then.’

Stressy glanced at Geo warmly.

‘It has only been my father who worried I might get lost somewhere,’ she said with a smile and suddenly became sad. ‘And now, it’s he who is lost...’

Geo choked. Stressy looked at him with care.

‘Don’t worry too much about me, okay? I don’t want anything to happen to you because of this, too.’

Geo’s tail began to tremble slightly.

‘Okay. I’m just a little worried,’ he said dropping his eyes.

Stressy gazed at him for some time and then, she shuddered.

‘Do you have any other secrets?’

‘That’s all, it seems’, Geo shrugged his fins and added, ‘don’t worry, I think your father will see his dear Stressy again.’

‘Gless,’ the young dolphinet smiled. ‘At first, my father named me Gless. But in a week or so, everyone started calling me Stressy for some reason.’

‘So, you have two names?’ Geo smiled in response. ‘This is very interesting.’

‘You’d better call me Stressy,’ the dolphinet said cheerily. ‘I’m not used to my real name.’

‘Okay,’ Geo said warmly. ‘I like the name Stressy very much! So, let’s swim back to our friends now?’

‘Sure,’ the dolphinet nodded her head and quickly turned around.

This time, Geo’s nose was already happy to meet her tail again.

* * *

Two days later, the friends set off on their journey. They moved in a slightly different order this time. Bin, Karen and Medky swam in the front of the group. On the turtle’s back as usual, nippers and a sling cutter were attached with a nice car net. Straight after them, there gracefully followed manta Bolly with the octopus on her back. Geo and Stressy swam at the end of the group.

For that, there were two reasons. Firstly, they had a chance to have a nice and peaceful conversation. Secondly, the young dolphinet's tail was far away from the noses of our friends.

A week later, the group reached the first big city. As Karen said, there was a big dolphinarium called The Sea World. Friends swam into a cosy lagoon located not far from it and gathered for the first meeting.

‘So, my friends, what’s our plan of action?’ Bin addressed everyone.

‘First, we simply need to find out whether Stressy’s father is here or not,’ Geo spoke and looked at his female companion. ‘By the way, what’s his name?’

‘Onik,’ the dolphinet smiled. ‘Also, he has a scar on his back next to the fin. He liked to joke that he once had bad luck playing around in his childhood. Perhaps, it will help you somehow.’

‘Fine,’ Karen nodded. ‘I think I’ll first go for a walk around there first and look for your father.’

‘And on your way back, dear, don’t ignore the local pizzerias’, Bolly smiled and added, looking at Stressy, ‘Would you please take an extra box this time? Something tells me that our new companion is going to like pizza too.’

‘What are you talking about?’ Stressy asked, when she realized they were talking about her.

‘You’ll see in the evening,’ Ponty replied to her with a smile. ‘There’s no point in talking about it: you should try it!’

Everyone erupted into laughter. Then, the friends decided to observe the park a little. From the water, they could see some wagons with people inside that were rolling on high mounted rails, various Ferris wheels spinning and big fountains spouting water. They could also hear the sounds of wonderful music playing. Crowds of people were flowing into the park from different sides. There were a lot of children among them.

‘It is quite fun here,’ Bin said thoughtfully.

‘Yes, people, especially children, like coming here to look at animals. They’ll often remember them after that and even draw pictures of them,’ Karen explained

‘What do they need that for?’ Medky asked her.

‘I don’t know,’ Karen shrugged her fins, ‘but, people have always tried to be surrounded by animals. In many homes, you can see dogs, cats and even aquariums. The latter are big water reservoirs made of glass where beautiful fish swim.’

‘I saw dogs and cats too when I was on land,’ Bin smiled. ‘I even stroked a cat. It was so fluffy and it nicely purred all the time.’

All of them smiled.

‘And what about dolphins?’ Bolly asked. ‘How do people feel about them?’

‘They love the dolphins a lot, and the children – they just adore them,’ Karen said and then pointed with her fin in the direction of the water park. ‘Do you see how many of the little ones are going to watch their performance?’

‘Quite a lot,’ Geo said and added, ‘it’s probably nice when so many children love you.’

‘Very well,’ Bin broke the discussion, ‘let’s carry on with our plan.’

‘Well, right,’ Bolly agreed. ‘My stomach’s starting to growl from being empty.’

‘This definitely means it’s time for me to go ashore,’ Karen sighed in a playful manner.

After that, all of them headed to a deserted sandbank located not far from the park.

Soon, she laid down in the shallow water and looked at the sky. In a moment, there it was – a girl who got to her feet at a sandy beach. She wore a T-shirt, shorts and flip flops.

Stressy looked at such an extraordinary event with her eyes wide open.

‘Is it you, Karen?’ she asked in surprise.

The girl laughed.

‘Of course, it’s me, Stressy. Who else can it be?’

‘You look very beautiful,’ the young dolphinet smiled. ‘Particularly, I like this long fur on your head.’

Everyone shook with laughter.

‘It’s called hair,’ Geo explained. ‘All the people have got it.’

‘Well, almost everyone,’ Karen made a correction and pointed to a bald fisherman in the distance.

‘That man is obviously closer to us, the dolphins,’ Bin developed the idea while his friends laughed cheerily.

‘Well guys, I’m off,’ the girl said and, having waved them with her hand, she headed towards the park’s entrance.

The Sea World

Soon after, Karen was walking along the beautiful alley of The Sea World, looking around with interest. Pelicans with serious looks were walking closely to her and fur seals were swimming on the other side of the road. Many children were watching them with their eyes wide open and often took pictures of them.

After a while, a sculpture of two pretty dolphins appeared on the path and the girl realized that she was somewhere near her goal. Right after the sculpture, Karen turned following the Dolphin Bay sign and found herself near large water reservoirs. Dark backs of the dolphins were flashing here and there inside them. Slightly further, there was the main lagoon where the performance was going on.

Karen watched it a little from the distance and approached a small backwater in which two dolphins were swimming peacefully. She sat by the water and began to talk to them.

‘Hello, guys!’ she said.

The dolphins looked at her sluggishly and continued their swimming: hundreds of the people would greet them here every day.

‘What are your names?’ Karen asked them.

‘Hear that, Glossy? She wants to know our names,’ one of the dolphins idly addressed his girlfriend.

‘Well, tell her. It’s not hard,’ Glossy replied to him. ‘But, whether she understands us or not, is not our business. We are polite dolphins, aren’t we?’

‘All right,’ the first dolphin said and looked at Karen as he prepared himself to speak.

‘Well, I’ve already heard about Glossy,’ the girl said, smiling. ‘By the way, she’s very polite. What’s your name?’

The dolphin stopped with his mouth open. Glossy swam to him from behind and looked at Karen in amazement.

‘Do you understand the dolphin language?’ she wondered.

‘Yes, Glossy,’ the girl nodded and, looking at the second dolphin, asked, ‘what’s your friend’s name?’

‘Stess,’ Glossy answered for him. ‘He’s good, generally, just a little grumpy.’

‘Hello, Stess!’ Karen smiled. ‘Will you finally talk to me?’

‘Good gracious!’ the dolphin found his tongue again. ‘It’s the first time I see a human being who understands our language.’

‘I’ve been studying it for two years now,’ the girl said, without going into the details.

‘Well done!’ Glossy smiled. ‘And what’s your name?’

‘Karen,’ she replied.

‘Nice to meet you, Karen!’ Stess said in a normal voice. ‘On your way back, will you please tell our trainer that we love snappers more than cod?’

‘Of course I will, guys,’ the girl nodded and switched to the main question. ‘I’ve come here to resolve one matter. Have you met the dolphin called Onik? He’s from the Great Barrier Reef and he has a small scar on his back.’

‘Onik?’ Glossy and Stess asked again.

‘Yes,’ Karen said. ‘He might have got here several months ago.’

‘Then, he isn’t here for sure,’ Stess replied with certainty. ‘There haven’t been any newcomers here for more than a year.’

Karen sighed.

‘Thank you for the help, guys,’ she said and rose to her feet. ‘Well then, I’ll go and tell your trainer about the snappers.’

‘Thanks a lot, Karen,’ Glossy smiled. ‘You can look for Onik at some other place. We’ve recently heard our trainers talking about some new dolphins that were delivered to the next dolphinarium on the coast. I think it’s called Magic of the Dolphins.’

‘That’s great news!’ Karen brightened up. ‘Thanks a lot, guys!’

The dolphins waved her goodbye with their fins. After that, the girl talked with their trainer for a while and then headed to a pizza place. She would not want her friends to be left hungry, listening to Bolly’s stomach growls.

* * *

Soon, Karen came to a deserted beach with a stack of pizza boxes in her hands. Her friends were still in the same place she had left them. Stressy was especially anxious, waiting for news.

‘Any news, Karen?’ she asked immediately, ‘is my father there?’

The girl shook her head and Stressy became sad.

‘But, I’ve got some good news too,’ the girl said and sat down on the sand by the water.

Everyone swam a little closer.

‘It’s been a long time since new dolphins were brought to this dolphinarium,’ Karen told them. ‘Though, I was told that a several new dolphins were brought to another dolphinarium not so long ago. It’s located on the coast only a couple of days away from here.’

‘Did they hear about my father there, in that dolphinarium?’ the young dolphinet asked, showing some hope.

Karen shook her head.

‘We’ll get there very soon and find out everything ourselves,’ Geo patted Stressy on her back. ‘And now, you should try this pizza.’

‘What’s that?’ the dolphinet asked with curiosity.

Karen smiled and began opening the boxes. As usual, Ponty eat and fed Bolly and Medky, while Karen was feeding the dolphins.

‘Mmm, so tasty!’ Stressy exclaimed, amazed after she took a bite. ‘Do people eat this every day?’

Karen nodded cheerily in response.

‘How could you abandon such a yummy thing for life in the sea?’ Stressy wondered again, swallowing the second piece of the pizza.

‘You see, I’ve found something better here than pizza there,’ Karen replied, looking fondly at Bin.

‘Just a little better,’ he smiled.

A gale of the friends’ cheery laughter followed.

After the meal, Karen laid down on the sand by the water and looked at the sky. In a moment, she became a dolphin, surrounded by her friends again.

‘Geo’, Stressy asked the dolphin quietly, ‘who was she addressing in the sky? I saw it in her eyes.’

‘Well, people have their own Neptune whom they call God,’ Geo replied in the same low voice. ‘It is He who helps Karen transform from a human into a dolphin. I'll tell you more about it later.'

'Wow! It's so interesting!' Stressy replied. 'Don't forget to tell me about it, please, because I'm always forgetting everything.'

Geo smiled.

'Alright, I promise.'

After that, the friends swam away from the shore and began preparing for sleep as they planned to cover a long distance the next day. However, as the first star appeared in the sky, bright fireballs lightened up over the park accompanied by a loud pounding.

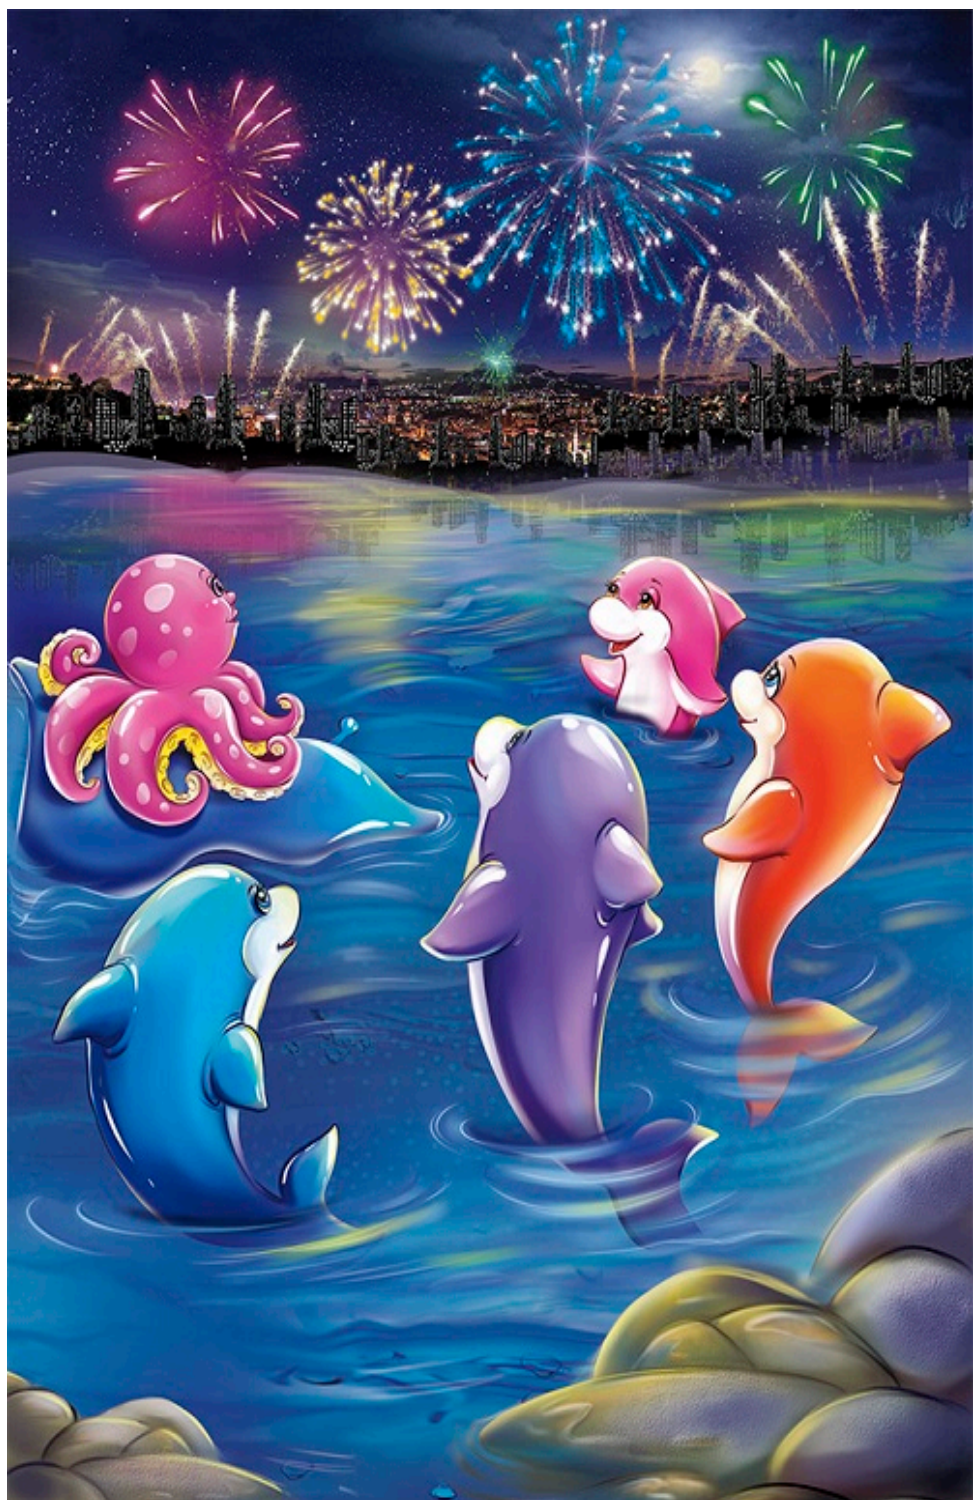

'What's that?' friends one by one looked around in surprise as the sky sparkled everywhere.

'These're fireworks,' Karen explained. 'People make them to celebrate something. They're probably celebrating something today, too'

'It's so beautiful,' Stressy murmured, amazed.

Soon after, the fireworks were over and the friends began falling asleep. This time, nothing disturbed them until the morning.

* * *

The next morning, the travellers continued their journey. They formed in the same order, except for Geo and Stressy who swam a little behind, as they wanted to talk to each other privately.

‘Geo, can I ask you something?’ Stressy asked, and after the dolphin gave her an affirmative nod, she continued. ‘Why are you still alone, without the other half?’

‘Well, I think until now, I haven’t met the one I would like to see by my side every day,’ Geo replied with a smile.

‘Until now?’ the young dolphinet narrowed her eyes slyly.

At first, Geo was slightly confused, but then he looked into her eyes with a smile.

‘You aren’t like the others. You’re so straightforward, yet very kind and caring,’ the dolphin laughed cheerfully. ‘What’s more, it’s never boring to be around you for!’

Stressy smiled happily.

‘My father always wanted me to find a true friend who would love me. He called him the other half.’

Geo stared at her in surprise.

‘I’ve always dreamt about my other half too...’ he said and kept silent.

For a while, they swam in silence.

‘Geo, what do you think happens when two halves meet each other?’ Stressy asked him.

‘I think the stars start pouring out of their hearts then,’ Geo laughed in response.

The dolphinet was silent again and then looked at him with a shine in her eyes.

‘You’ve said that so beautifully! I also think that it must be so,’ she glanced at him curiously. ‘But, how do you know that?’

Geo stopped and, looking into her shining eyes, gently touched her fins.

‘Because, the stars have already been pouring out from my heart for long!’

‘And from mine too, it seems...’ Stressy replied softly.

Having said that, they both became slightly embarrassed. Then, they swam happily to catch up to their friends.

Onik

By the middle of next day, the travellers reached their destination. The dolphinarium was located in a similar manner, on the coast near a big water channel. The friends swam closer to it and gathered for a meeting.

‘So, my dear,’ Bin looked at Karen warmly, ‘this time again, almost all the work falls on you.’

‘That’s all right, Binnie, I’m not tired of it,’ Karen smiled. ‘The main thing is to help Stressy. So, shall we swim to the shore?’

The friends nodded and followed her. Soon, Karen laid down in the shallow water near the shore and looked up at the sky. A moment later, she rose to her feet.

‘You do it greatly!’ Stressy pronounced with some sadness in her voice. ‘I’d like to turn into a human for some time too, but Geo told me that I would get lost somewhere among the people.’

Everyone roared with laughter.

‘Don’t worry, Stressy,’ Karen calmed her. ‘I wouldn’t turn into a human unless it was necessary. So now, I’m off to look for your father.’

‘Look for him thoroughly, Karen, okay?’ the young dolphinet gave her a look of hope.

The girl nodded, waved everyone goodbye and went to the entrance of the dolphinarium.

The local sea park was similar to the previous one in some ways: very green and with many pools filled with animals. Karen looked at the map with a ticket that she was given at the entrance and confidently went in the direction she needed. Soon, she saw pools with dolphins inside.

Karen chose the most discreet place by the edge of one of them and watched the dolphins. There were three of them in this pool. The girl examined each of them, but none had a scar on its back.

She decided not to talk to the dolphins yet and proceeded to the next pool. There were also three dolphins inside. Karen was watching them carefully when suddenly her heart started pounding: on the back of a dolphin was a scar right near the fin. The girl sat down by the water and waited for him to swim near her. Several minutes later, the dolphin with the scar came very close to her.

‘Excuse me,’ said the girl, ‘is your name Onik by any chance?’

The dolphin continued to swim as if he’d heard nothing. Karen sighed in disappointment. But a few moments later, he suddenly stopped and looked around in surprise.

‘Somebody called me Onik?’ he started speaking, ‘here, everyone calls me differently...’

The girl jumped on the spot with happiness.

‘Onik, Onik! I’ve called you!’

The dolphin, not understanding anything, looked at the happy girl and swam up to her.

‘Hello!’ he said just in case. ‘That’s right, my name’s Onik indeed, but how do you know my real name?’

‘Stressy,’ the girl answered cheerily, ‘your daughter told me.’

The dolphin almost choked from surprise.

‘You...’ he began slowly, ‘you can understand the dolphin language? You know my daughter Stressy?’

Karen nodded at him cheerily.

‘What happened to her?’ anxious Onik asked immediately.

‘She’s fine,’ the girl replied. ‘It’s her who organized the search for you. Now she’s in the lagoon not far from this dolphinarium.’

Then, a total silence fell.

‘I can’t believe it,’ Onik found his tongue a minute later. ‘Somebody, bite my tail! I must be dreaming!’

Karen laughed happily.

‘No way, this is all for real. We know that you swam to the other coast of Australia to see your relatives but ended up here.’

‘That’s right,’ Onik began to recover gradually. ‘Then, I have many questions for you. By the way, what's your name?’

‘Karen,’ the girl replied.

‘Nice to meet you, Karen,’ Onik smiled for the first time. ‘Tell me please, how can you understand us? Where did you meet my daughter? How did you find me here? Also... I think that’s enough for now.’

‘Onik, I’ll tell you everything,’ the girl replied, ‘but first, let’s move over to that isolated spot, so that no one would disturb us.’

The dolphin nodded and swam to the corner. An hour later, Karen finished her story.

‘Well,’ Onik said thoughtfully, ‘I’ve been coming up with the most incredible tales for Stressy all my life, but it seems that my daughter surpassed me: her reality proved to be much more fantastic.’

Karen laughed cheerily.

‘It looks like so, Onik. She’s very nice and she loves you very much.’

The dolphin’s eyes filled with tears.

‘I want to see her so much!’

‘I think you will, very soon,’ the girl said in a convincing voice.’

‘But how?’ Onik wondered. ‘No one has ever managed to get out of here.’

‘I don’t know,’ Karen shrugged with her shoulders. ‘We’ll figure something out for sure. Now, I must hurry back to tell the good news to your daughter. She’ll be incredibly happy to know that you’re alive.’

‘Then, go,’ Onik smiled and added in a moment, ‘thank you, Karen, for helping us so much!’

The girl waved him goodbye and rushed to the place where her friends were waiting. This time, she had some excellent news to share with them.

* * *

When Karen stepped on deserted seashore, many of her friends' eyes were looking at her from the water with interest. Stressy's eyes were shining the brightest.

'I've found... I've found him!' Karen cried, not waiting to be asked.

And then, there it was! Stressy leapt out of the water happily and, made a spin in the air, she flopped right on Geo's tail with a noise. The other animals laughed and congratulated each other as well.

'Your plan worked, dear!' Bin smiled happily.

'It was a great luck indeed, Binnie', Karen laughed in response and took out the map of the sea park from her pocket, then added, "Now, we have to think about how to get him out of there.'

'The most important thing is that he's alive!' Stressy exclaimed in a happy voice.

'And he looks quite well,' Karen added and handed the map to the octopus. 'Keep it until our meeting, Ponty. It shows the place where Onik is kept quite well.'

After that, the girl was about to lay down on the sand to turn into the dolphin when suddenly Bolly made a loud and tactful cough.

'Dear, would we not celebrate this wonderful event with a tasty pizza?' she asked somewhat surprised.

Everyone burst into laughter and the girl lightly slapped her forehead.

‘Oh, Bolly, I was so happy that I completely forgot about that.’

‘I see,’ the manta replied, waving her wings, ‘but luckily, you’ve got a friend who never forgets anything.’

‘What would we do without you, Bolly?’ Medky laughed cheerfully.

‘It’s hard to even imagine,’ the manta reflected.

Karen waved at them and briskly headed to the nearest pizzeria. An hour later, the friends, having eaten well, gathered for their meeting underwater. Karen showed with her fin on the map the location of the pool, where Onik was.

‘Not very close to the shore,’ Bin said thoughtfully.

‘Karen, can he jump over to the nearby pool which is closer to the water channel?’ Geo asked her.

‘I haven’t thought of that,’ she said, ‘but it’s probably possible. I can check that tomorrow, if you want.’

‘Anyway, it’s nearly ten meters to the seashore from there, Geo,’ Medky argued doubtfully. ‘He can’t jump so far.’

Everyone nodded in agreement.

‘One might think of some trolley, of course, but again, there’s a fence and there are guards,’ Karen spoke her thoughts, doubting. ‘It’s unlikely that somebody will help me carry a dolphin out of the dolphinarium.’

The friends smiled ironically.

‘So, what shall we do?’ Stressy asked in despair.

Everyone looked at each other.

‘So, shall we call Aya?’ Bin asked, looking at his saddened friends.

Everyone nodded unanimously.

‘Aya, our friend!’ Bin addressed to the sea. ‘We need you again.’

A few moments later, a glowing cloud-man began to appear near them. By seeing their old friend, everyone smiled; Stressy stared at him amazed.

‘Hello, my friends!’ Aya greeted them warmly. ‘How can I help you this time?’

‘Aya, we need to somehow get Stressy’s father out of the dolphinarium,’ Bin said and nodded, pointing to the young dolphinet. ‘We’ve found him, but the rest is beyond our powers.’

‘A dolphin, you say? Not a whale, at least,’ Aya smiled. ‘Does he want to leave that place indeed?’

‘Yes, I’ve talked to him recently,’ Karen replied. ‘He misses his daughter very much.’

Then, Aya looked at Stressy.

‘And I miss him too,’ the young dolphinet said, looking at the cloud-man beggingly.

‘Well, all right then, if it is so,’ Aya nodded. ‘It’s very crowded there right now, so wait for him to come by midnight.’

Everyone smiled happily.

‘How will you get him out of there, Aya?’ Ponty could not contain his curiosity.

The cloud-man laughed.

‘I don’t know myself yet,’ he said and started slowly disappearing. ‘I’ll think of something by night time.’

The last words Aya said reached the friends from sea blue.

‘What a friend you have!’ Stressy whispered to Geo in surprise. ‘Does he help everyone like that?’

‘No. He only helps the kind ones and if the deeds are good,’ the dolphin explained.

‘Where did you meet him?’ Stressy asked once again.

‘In Atlantis where Bin and Karen travelled to for their honeymoon,’ Geo replied and briefly retold the story of that journey to Stressy.

‘What an interesting thing – the honeymoon travel!’ the young dolphinet spoke thoughtfully and glanced at Geo.

* * *

When the sky became completely dark, the friends gathered near the shore again and began to wait.

‘I wonder how Aya will get him out of there?’ Medky spoke his thoughts.

‘Don’t even try guessing it, my friend. He’ll surely come up with something unusual,’ Bin replied. ‘Do you remember how he freed you from the poachers’ strong net with one movement of his hand?’

‘How can I forget?’ the turtle shuddered. ‘That day, my shell even turned a little grey from that.’

‘Where?’ Ponty asked, surprised.

Medky pointed with his eyes to a white spot on his shell. Ponty climbed to that place and started rubbing the spot with his tentacle. Unexpectedly, it soon vanished.

‘Turned grey, you say? I think you just need to wash yourself from time to time, my friend,’ he said, laughing. ‘Okay, Medky, you’ve now become young again!’

The friends dissolved into a cheery laughter.

‘Quiet!’ Geo interrupted them. ‘Look, something’s going on over there.’

Seven pairs of the eyes – without blinking – stared in the same direction. What they saw exceeded all their expectations: some odd construction was moving towards them over the sky from the sea park.

On the top of it, there was Aya holding something resembling a fish net in his hand. However, this net was made of thin shining beams. Inside it, there was Onik looking around in amazement.

The cloud-man with the dolphin glided slowly in the air over the park fence and began to descend to the water channel.

Stressy could not keep her eyes off her father. When they approached the water surface, she could not help crying out.

‘Daddy!’

Onik instantly turned his head towards her cry.

‘Daughter!’

In a few moments, they were together again.

* * *

‘Thank you, our dear Aya, for everything!’ Bin said, looking warmly in the glowing eyes of cloud-man.

Aya smiled.

‘My pleasure, Bin. You opened this agency to help others’, he said, ‘that is why you should understand me quite well. The most important thing is that all our deeds are kind.’

After that, the cloud-man rose above the water, waved everyone goodbye and melted away.

‘Goodbye, my friends! Call whenever you need me again,’ the friends heard his words.

Epilogue

Six months passed. It was a wonderful underwater day. That morning, Geo and Stressy decided to visit her father. When they arrived, they found Onik at home and in good spirits.

‘Dad, listen,’ Stressy said after they greeted each other. ‘You’re glowing with happiness. What is it?’

‘Yes, my children. I would like to talk to you about that.’

‘What’s the matter, Dad?’ the daughter asked with interest. ‘Recently, you seemed to be a little sad.’

‘I merely made an important decision yesterday, my children,’ Onik smiled. ‘Now, listen to me attentively.’

Geo and Stressy settled themselves comfortably and prepared to listen.

‘We, the dolphins, love freedom. Also, deep in our hearts, we are big romantics. I loved travelling and observing the world all my life too,’ at that moment, the dolphin made a short pause and looked at his daughter with warmth. ‘But, everything changed in my life when Stressy was born. Back then, it was the first time I realized that our love for others can bring a lot of happiness. I loved to bring her joy, teach her everything and compose various funny stories for her.’

Stressy looked at her father lovingly.

‘But she’s grown up and now, she has a wonderful friend – you, Geo. This is your family for your whole life, my daughter.’

‘You’re talking as if you are saying farewell, Dad,’ Stressy spoke with suspicion.

‘I haven’t finished yet,’ her father smiled. ‘With Stressy, I realized that the biggest happiness in life is not freedom but bringing joy to others. It happened so that several months I lived in the people’s dolphinarium. We brought joy to the children who came to watch our performances there. Every day, hundreds of grateful children’s eyes would look at us there. I felt such love coming from them that it is even difficult to express.’

Then, Onik sighed.

‘You don’t want to go back there, do you?’ Geo wondered.

‘No way!’ Onik reacted, surprised. ‘But, I loved to bring joy to the little children with my performances.’

‘So, what are you going to do now?’ his daughter asked.

‘I have an idea. I’m going to swim around Australia and perform near the beaches with many children. Karen told me that the people call it a tour or round trip. Their performers travel all around the world. I learnt a lot of things as well when I was in the dolphinarium.’

‘That’s a great idea!’

‘Yes!’ Onik replied. ‘You live here with friendship and happiness. I’m swimming to those who need me right now. I know this for certain.’

After that, Onik swam up to Geo.

‘Take care of my daughter, please, she is so clumsy you know,’ he said.

Geo looked at him seriously and nodded.

Then, Onik swam up to his daughter and looked lovingly into her eyes.

‘When will we meet again, Dad?’ she asked him.

‘I don’t know,’ Onik shrugged with his fins. ‘First, I’d like to complete what I conceived and then we’ll see. But, I will come back to you for sure.’

Having said that, he smiled, waved his fin goodbye and slowly swam to the open sea.

‘Greetings to your wonderful friends,’ they heard his cheerful voice coming from the blue of the sea. ‘By the way, I would be happy to see my grandchildren when I come back!’

‘A good father you’ve got,’ Geo said with a smile.

CONTENTS:

The Missing .....	3
The Sea World.....	21
Onik .....	30
Epilogue .....	43

Igor N. Bondar

DOLPHINS - 4
Stressy

www.bookfaceyourself.com